Sometimes getting to work can have daily obstacles that are out of your control.

Let's say your partner is under a lot of pressure at work and now they have to work some unscheduled overtime... and they have the only car. Typically, you would take the bus home, but you just missed it and the next one doesn't come for a few hours.

That's when ridesharing can be beneficial.

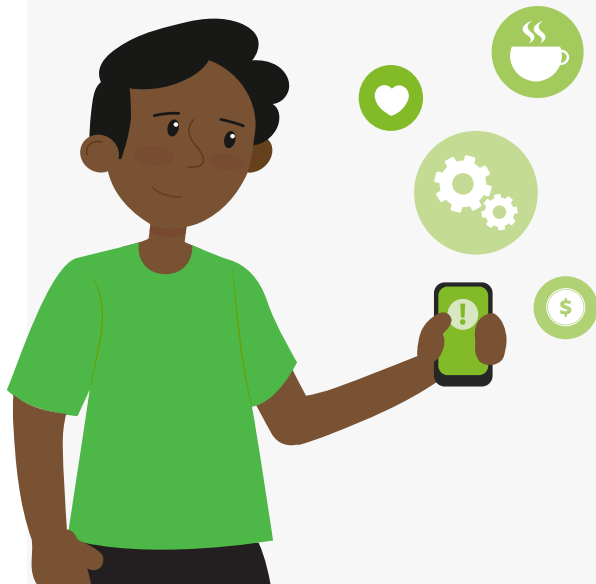

When we organize a group of people there are more individuals to rely on, which creates a safety net to help support your commute to and from work.

Still—emergencies can happen.

Signing up with CommuteInfo can give you access to benefits that can add to your safety net.

Let's say instead of your partner, it's you that has to work overtime. After the overtime hours are done that carpool you took to work is long gone. It looks like it's time to shell out for another way home, right? Not so fast! Because you registered your carpool with them you have access to the emergency ride home benefit.

Simply make your preferred ride home arrangement, save the receipt, and submit it to CommuteInfo for reimbursement!
